Tagline: Pushes utilitarianism to its uncomfortable conclusions.

Anecdote: Takes utilitarianism so seriously he'll calmly argue that donating to effective charities matters more than your new phone—and that your views on euthanasia should follow the same ruthless logic.

Tagline: Treats God's existence like a carefully weighed probability.

Anecdote: Famously defends a God who can do anything but chooses to play by self-imposed rules—like an omnipotent being who deliberately sticks to the laws of nature and human freedom for the sake of a fair game.

Tagline: Turns genes and memes into the real drivers of culture.

Anecdote: Argues that ideas behave like genes—"memes" that copy themselves—so even wildly false beliefs can spread and survive, not because they're true, but because they're catchy, comforting, or contagious.

Tagline: Theology from the underside of history.

Anecdote: Often called the father of liberation theology, he insists that true faith demands a "preferential option for the poor," blending Marxist social analysis with Christian commitment.

Tagline: Points at "good" like you point at the colour yellow and tells you that you don't understand what you're on about.

Anecdote: Accuses others of the "naturalistic fallacy" for trying to define good in natural terms.

Mind Explosion Hack: Teams up with Hume and Ayer—Hume kills your "is→ought"; Ayer gets personal about your 'meaning'; and Moore calls your 'good' risibly naturalistic. Your ethics is dead in the water. If you're an ethicist, don't bother.

Tagline: Takes patriarchy straight on—starting with God.

Anecdote: A pioneer of feminist theology, she argues that traditional images of God and Church structures sacralise male dominance and calls for radically reimagining both.
